

Supplier Guide

How to register, find opportunities, and submit a winning application

RFQ Hub is where organisations publish Requests for Quotation (RFQs) and suppliers apply for them. This guide explains how to register your company, what your supplier number means, and how to put in an application.

You register once. After that your details and documents are held on file, so applying to later opportunities takes a fraction of the time.

In this guide

- Step 1 — Register your company
- Step 2 — Your supplier number and confirmation email
- Step 3 — Find opportunities
- Step 4 — Apply to an RFQ
- Step 5 — Asking questions
- Keeping your details up to date
- Need help?

STEP 1 Register Your Company

On the public portal, click Register Free or View & Apply on any opportunity. You will be asked for your email address first. If you are already registered, that is all you need — you go straight through.

If you are new, you complete a one-off registration form covering:

Section	What is asked for
Company Details	Company name and number of years in business.
Main Contact Person	Name, title, designation, phone number and an optional additional contact number.
Location & Reach	Your address, the provinces you want to be notified about, and optionally your website or social media.
Services	A description of the services or products you offer, and the geographical areas you can service.
Document Submission	Your supporting documents — see below.
Declarations	Confirmation that you accept the Declaration and Supplier Registration Terms and Conditions.

The documents

Three are required, and four more are optional but well worth adding:

Document	Required?
CIPC Registration, or ID for a Sole Proprietor, or NPO Certificate	Required
Proof of Address	Required
SARS Information — tax clearance certificate, PIN, or VAT/tax registration proof	Required
Proof of Banking	Optional
B-BBEE Affidavit or Certificate	Optional
Valid Health and Safety Certificate	Optional
Any Special Permits or Registrations	Optional

Worth doing properly Upload the optional documents too. Many RFQs ask for B-BBEE or health and safety paperwork, and anything already on file can be reused with a single click instead of being hunted down against a deadline.

Account lockout After five failed attempts, registration or login from that email is blocked for one hour. If this happens, simply wait — it clears on its own.

STEP 2 Your Supplier Number and Confirmation Email

As soon as you register, you are issued a supplier number — for example SUP00042 — and sent a confirmation email containing:

- Your supplier number. Quote it in any correspondence about your registration.
- The company, contact, province and registration date held on record.

- A list of exactly which documents were received.
- A private link for managing your notification preferences.

Keep this email. It is your proof of registration and the easiest place to find your supplier number later.

— The registration confirmation email as it arrives, showing the supplier number box and documents received.

STEP 3 Find Opportunities

Open opportunities are listed on the public portal. You can search by keyword, filter by province and category, and sort by closing date.

Each listing shows the closing date, a live countdown, the location, the project, and the organisation running it.

— The Open Opportunities page showing the search bar, province filter and an opportunity card.

Getting told about new ones

You do not have to keep checking. When you registered you chose which provinces to be notified about, and you are emailed and texted whenever a matching opportunity is published. You can change those provinces at any time — see the last section.

STEP 4 Apply to an RFQ

Click View Opportunity on any open listing. You will see the full description, any documents the organisation has attached for you to download, and the questions and answers thread. The application form sits below.

Your company information

Company name, email address, phone number and company registration number.

Required documents

The organisation specifies which documents it wants. For anything you already hold on file, you are offered a choice:

- Use the document on file — the file you registered with is attached automatically. This is selected by default and is much the faster route.
- Upload a different one — attach a newer or more appropriate file instead.

Some documents ask for an expiry date. Enter it accurately: the organisation can see whether a document had already expired when you applied, and an expired certificate reflects poorly on an otherwise strong bid.

Additional optional documents

Beyond what was asked for, you can attach any supporting material — technical specifications, references, case studies, certifications. You can select several files at once. Accepted formats are PDF, Word, Excel and images (JPG, PNG).

This is your opportunity to stand out. Two suppliers meeting the same minimum requirements are separated by what else they put on the table.

Your price estimate

Enter your Price Estimate (ZAR). Use numbers only, without commas or currency symbols. This is submitted with your application and is visible to the organisation running the RFQ.

— The application form showing the document reuse choice, the Additional Optional Documents box and the Price Estimate field.

The application form

Click Submit Application. You will receive a confirmation email with a reference code straight away. If it does not arrive, check your spam folder before assuming the application failed.

STEP 5 Asking Questions

Every opportunity has an Ask a Question button. You do not need to be logged in — just your email address, your name and your question.

The organisation can answer privately to you, or publish the answer on the RFQ page where all suppliers can see it. Published answers appear in the Questions & Answers section, so it is worth reading through what has already been asked before applying.

After the closing date

An opportunity stays visible for three days after it closes, marked  Closed — Questions Only.

- You cannot submit a new application during this window.
- You can still use Ask a Question to contact the organisation.

This exists for exactly the situation where you realise just after the deadline that you left a document out, or want to confirm your submission arrived. Use it — do not assume nothing can be done.

Keeping Your Details Up to Date

Every notification email includes a private link to your preferences page. From there, without logging in, you can:

- Change which provinces you are notified about.
- Upload or replace any of your documents.

Keep documents current Replace certificates as they are renewed. Your documents on file are what get reused when you apply, so an out-of-date tax clearance sitting on file will follow you into your next application.

That link is personal to you. Please do not forward it.

Your Information and POPIA

The details and documents you provide are collected so that organisations running tenders on this platform can assess your application. They are stored securely, shared only with the organisation running an RFQ you apply to, and never sold or passed to anyone else.

Under the Protection of Personal Information Act you may ask to see, correct or delete what is held about you. Reply to any email from the platform to make that request.
